The Adrenaline Rush is Back with Bigger and Better Scares for the 2nd Annual Fright at the Museum- Dead Men Walking at the National Museum of Crime & Punishment

Washington, DC – Behind the walls of the National Museum of Crime & Punishment lies “Old Smokey,” the official Tennessee electric chair that executed 125 murderous men from 1916 to 1960. Last Halloween season, those who dared to enter came face-to-face with the ghosts of Old Smokey as they wandered through select museum galleries. This year, the victims of those murderers have come back for revenge during “Fright at the Museum: Dead Men Walking.”

The zombie victims of these heinous crimes will stop at nothing to find the spirits of their killers for the ultimate vengeance. Guests to the museum will be wise to stay out of the victim’s way in this eternal search, as there’s no way to escape once they have someone in their grasp. From the moment guests enter, they will hear the screams, smell the fear, see the horror and experience what every Halloween house-goer wants...the rush of adrenaline and repeated heart drop.

Fright at the Museum will take place Thursday, October 21 - Sunday, October 24 and again from Thursday, October 28 - Sunday, October 31. Tickets for Fright at the Museum are different than regular museum admission tickets, as regular museum admission tickets are not valid during the Haunted House. In order to scream, guests must be over 17 years old or with a parent or guardian. Tickets are $20 and are on sale now at the museum front desk or online at http://www.crimemuseum.org/Fright_at_the_Museum.html.
